Biochemical and histochemical studies of acid phosphatase from mesenteric lymph nodes and tumoral lymph nodes were carried out. In both groups of cells, the highest activity of acid phosphatase was found in the mesenteric lymph node parenchyma cells, and this activity was localized in the cytoplasm. In lymphomas and carcinomas, acid phosphatase activity was present in the cytoplasm and also in the plasma membrane. The activity was localized in the tumoral cells in the cytoplasm. In the luminal region of the sinuses and the splenic sinuses, the enzyme was found in the sinus walls and the splenic sinuses. This finding was confirmed by histochemical tests. The results obtained demonstrate that the mesenteric lymph node parenchyma cells and tumoral lymph node cells possess similar biochemical characteristics. to improve the psychological, social, and economic status of the nation \[\[B14]\]. In previous studies, the optimum management strategy for postoperative pain management in patients undergoing surgery is to be started before or within 24 hours of operation and to be continued until 24 hours after surgery \[\[B15]\]. We planned to use patient-controlled analgesia (PCA) to achieve this goal; however, the operation time was late in the morning (9:00 AM). Thus, the time of PCA application was not suitable for the usual pattern of the postoperative pain management. After the operation, pethidine was used for postoperative pain relief until postoperative day 1. This treatment strategy also seems to be appropriate, as pethidine provides effective pain relief and has relatively mild side effects. We attempted to prevent the occurrence of postoperative complications by modifying the various surgical techniques and pre- and postoperative management strategies. The incidence of postoperative complications was 13.1% in our study, which is comparable to the rate (17%) in previous studies of vascular bypass surgery \[\[B16],[B17]\]. In particular, the rate of major complications (21.1%) was slightly higher than that in previous studies of vascular bypass surgery \[\[B16],[B17]\]. However, in one previous study, the mean operative f988f36e3a
